And she also caused herself anemia from giving blood too frequently (her words). Jim told me when they were here that she's not going to physical therapy either like the doctor ordered (to gain her muscle strength back after surgery). When I asked her about it she admitted that she should be going but gave me some excuse (I can't remember) as to why she's not going.

Do you guys ever get concerned with the amount of people (especially men) that mom has coming & going in her house?

I just hope that in her desperation to keep the house as she calls it (I don't see it quite that way, I think she has other living options) she doesn't wind up taking in a loser (or someone unstable) & get herself in an unsafe situation. Having Ron at the house gives me a little piece of mind but not much. Seems risky if you ask me.

good morning guys, I had a young man staying here from L. A. as he is in town to work at the convention center downtown for Com Con that is going on for 4 days, the hotels are asking from 479. to 279., He got lost last night, so I gave him a ride to work today and packed him a lunch, he was a nice young man from Peru. When I was downtown the streets were so crowded with young people like it was Disney land, there was a doughnut hut and 200 or more people in line for stupid donuts, people were sleeping on the street, crowds all over all before 9:00, I got the heck out of there asap. EmojiEmojiHave a nice day, Love Gussie I have been trying to put in a little cobble stone side walk up to my front door, the work yesterday made my leg swell like a balloon, so will have to find a worker to do the rest of the digging for me. Love, Mom
